During your stay in Brussels, there are lots of things to do! Find out what we've selected for you...

Magritte Museum

The multidisciplinary collection of the museum is the richest in the world. It contains more than 200 works consisting in oils on canvas, gouaches, drawings, sculptures and painted objects but also in advertising posters, music scores, vintage photographs and films produced by Magritte himself. The Magritte Museum will be, in its domain, the world reference centre for the knowledge of the artist.

Note: You can also discover a permanent exhibition over the Expo'58 and have, from the top of the Atomium, a beautiful view of Brussels.

Kunstenfestivaldesarts

Theatre, music, dance, film, fine arts ... and every imaginable combination of them. Firmly focused on the future, not only does this festival present the cultural diversities of the country, it also invites a good number of performing art companies from abroad, who find a platform of expression before an attentive and generous audience here. There are loads of original first productions, trying out this testing ground for their future creative work. Because the public of Brussels is well known for its open-mindedness and curiosity, but its cosmopolitanism and readiness to criticize also make it an accurate barometer of today's talents. The "Kunst" program is selective evidence of this every year.

PARIS – BRUSSELS.

Two centuries of architectural affinities

This Paris-Brussels exhibition lifts the curtain on the often unsuspected wealth of Franco-Belgian exchanges. It starts at the time when Belgium was French and when Belgian architects, trained in Paris, won the big prize of Rome. Down the years, we come across Viollet-le-Duc at the Porte de Hal, then the Parisian Guimard, the architect of the Paris metro stations, who found his style by visiting the Horta houses: we see Henry van de Velde unveiling the first plans for the famous theatre of the Champs-Élysées, Antoine Courtens become a master of Art Deco after rubbing shoulders with the Parisian creators and Henry Lacoste build an artistic bridge between the school of fine arts of Paris and the Brussels academy. Hundreds of original documents illustrate two centuries of these burgeoning architectural relations between the two capitals.

Coudenberg (Archaeological site & Museum)

From the middle ages, a castle overlooked Brussels from Coudenberg hill. From the 12th century, the successive monarchs and their representatives transformed a small fortified castle into a sumptuous residential palace, one of the most beautiful palace of Europe and one of Charles V's main residences.

This prestigious building is severely damaged by fire in 1731. Some forty years later, the ruins of the palace are pulled down and the ground flattened out for the construction of the new royal district. The remains of this palace make up the Coudenberg archaeological site.

During the visit, you will discover the Rue Isabelle and the old structures of the main buildings of the former palace of Brussels, which are now the foundations for today's royal district and the Hoogstraeten House where the most interesting discoveries made during the various archaeological excavations conducted on the Coudenberg are displayed.

Whales & dolphins

Are you fascinated by whales, dolphins and other marine mammals? Then, don't miss the "Whales and dolphins" exhibition; it sweeps you down to the sea bed and tells you about the diversity of the species, their origin and their evolution, their way of life and, finally, the sometimes ambiguous relationships that man has with these animals. A fascinating exhibition to discover in the wonderful Museum of Natural Sciences.
